Fayoum, Dimeh al-Siba, Dimeh of the Lions, was a Ptolemaic city believed to be founded by Ptolemy II in the third century BC, on a site that shows evidence of habitation from the Neolithic period. Today, it is more isolated, but during Ptolemaic times it was at the shore of the much larger lake, situated at the edge of Moeris Bay and the beginning of the caravan routes into the Western Desert. The ruins of Dimeh al-Siba contain the two temples, houses, underground chambers, streets and ten-meter high walls that are sometimes up to five meters thick. The walls themselves are a testament to the survivability of mudbrick in the desert environment. The ground is strewn with debris. An uncountable number of shards cover the entire temple mound.

The Monastery of Abu Lifa is a historic and secluded Coptic Christian monastery located in the Fayoum Oasis region of Egypt, in a mountainous area known as Gebel El-Naqlun. The monastery is noted for its striking location, perched high on a cliffside and overlooking the beautiful Fayoum desert landscape.

Built as early as the 4th century, the monastery's remote position made it an ideal place for monks seeking solitude and contemplation, away from worldly distractions. Getting to the monastery involves a journey through the rugged terrain of the desert and, in some areas, a steep ascent up the cliff. This adds to the spiritual ambiance, emphasizing isolation and dedication to faith. It's believed that some of the original cells and chapels are carved directly into the rock, showcasing the monks' dedication and resourcefulness in creating a space for worship and communal life.
